Abstract

Orion Samuelson, Oral History of IL Agriculture, AIS-V-L-2009-002

Biographical Information Overview of Interview: Orion Samuelson was born on March 31st, 1934 in Ontario, Wisconsin, and grew up on the family's dairy farm. At the age of fourteen he contracted Legg-Perthes disease, a bone disorder that caused him to be confined to his bed for two years. During that time, with a farm career out of the question, Orion considered radio broadcasting as an alternative, helped along the way by Mr. Robert Gehrig, his vocational agriculture teacher. Orion discusses his childhood years on the farm, including his one-room school house, the Great Depression and World War II years, and the day in 1948 when the farm first received electricity.

Following graduation from high school in 1952, Orion attended the University of Wisconsin on a scholarship for three weeks, then dropped out to attend the American Institute of the Air in Mendota Heights, Minnesota. For the next two years he worked at WHBY Radio in Appleton, Wisconsin, then at WBAY Radio and TV in Green Bay, Wisconsin, where he began his career in agricultural broadcasting. In 1960 he moved to Chicago and started work at WGN Radio, the famous clear-channel station heard throughout the Midwest. Orion has been at WGN ever since, joined in 1977 by Max Armstrong. As the station's Agribusiness Director, Orion serves the Midwest's vast agricultural audience, and increasingly, to a wider urban and suburban audience as well.

Orion discussed how agriculture has evolved since his youth on the family's dairy farm in Wisconsin, and shared his views on a wide variety of contemporary issues as well. These include the fuel versus food debate, the role of markets and commodity prices in farming, the impact of genetics on both plants and livestock, environmental issues, the role of land grant colleges and extension services, price-production ratios in modern agriculture, and the changing face of rural communities. Over his 55 plus years in agriculture, Orion has met every president from JFK to George W. Bush, as well as every Secretary of Agriculture since 1960. He has traveled to forty-three countries, and given scores of speeches and motivational talks over the years.
